

We Need This Spectrum.

There are many reasons why, among them are:

- the existing bands are frequently used by cordless phones and other electronic equipment, often times causing self sabotage to Wi-Fi connections
- current frequency limitations limit the range of Wi-Fi access points
- If the FCC is to claim that wireless broadband represents effective intermodal competition for DSL and cable modem service, more spectrum and greater operating ranges are required.